

Beat: Politics

OBAMA CELEBRATING A HALF CENTURY SINCE THE MARCH IN WASHINGTON AT 52 ANNIVERSARY

TRIBUTE TO MARTIN LUTHER KING

Paris, Washington DC, 31.08.2015, 03:56 Time

USPA NEWS - "That's the promise of tomorrow" "that in the face of impossible odds, people who love their country can change it. That when millions of Americans of every race and every region, every faith, every station, can join together in a spirit of brotherhood, said Obama marking the March in Washington.

"That's the promise of tomorrow" "that in the face of impossible odds, people who love their country can change it. That when millions of Americans of every race and every region, every faith and every station, can join together in a spirit of brotherhood, then those mountains will be made low, and those rough places will be made plain, and those crooked places, they straighten out towards grace, and we will vindicate the faith of those who sacrificed so much and live up to the true meaning of our creed, as one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." "President Obama two years ago today celebrating a half-century since the March on Washington. To mark the 52nd anniversary. Here are the President's remarks on a half-century of progress on civil rights and the work still ahead.

President Barack Obama delivers remarks at the Let Freedom Ring ceremony to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the historic March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech, at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C. August 28, 2013. (Official White House Photo by Pete Souza)

REMEMBERING MARTIN LUTHER KING

As we reflect on the tremendous progress made over the past half-century, we honour those brave leaders who paved the way, and upon whose shoulders we all stand, by recognising our responsibility to undertake the immense job still at hand.

Fifty years ago, the heroic voice of Reverend Martin Luther King Jr. rang out across our capital, our country, and the world, and called on us to become the more perfect union he believed we were destined to be. A country which endows every man, woman and child with unalienable rights to "Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."

These are words which we repeat so often, that their depth and relevance today can easily be missed.

Any nation which pledges to honour its citizen's right to "life" should enact and protect laws which ensure high quality and affordable access to the doctors, treatment, and preventative care we need to live full and healthy lives.

Any country committed to defending "liberty" should protect our fundamental right as Americans; the right to vote. Our liberty is dependent upon free and inclusive elections, and our ability to peacefully hold our leaders accountable, while directing the course of our country. Dr. King was the first to tell us that the "arc of the moral universe is long, but that it bends toward justice." President Obama went further today, to remind us all that "the arc of the moral universe may bend toward justice, but it doesn't bend on its own." President Barack Obama delivers remarks at the Let Freedom Ring ceremony to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the historic March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech, at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C. August 28, 2013. (by Amanda Lucidon)

The right to "pursue happiness" is most secure when we put the education of all of our children, the growth of our economy, the health of our businesses, the creation of jobs, and the stability of our markets ahead of self-interest, and political posturing. Every American deserves to feel the pride of a hard-earned paycheck, and the opportunity to achieve their dreams, regardless of who they are, or the zip code of their birth.

break As we reflect on the tremendous progress made over the past half-century, we honor those brave leaders who paved the way, and upon whose shoulders we all stand, by recognising our responsibility to undertake the immense job still at hand. This is a time to reaffirm our commitment to the ideals on which America was founded, and to help ensure this country continues to "rise up," as Dr. King declared 50 years ago, and "live out the true meaning of its creed."

The photo describes: President Barack Obama and First Lady Michelle Obama wave to the crowd at the end of the Let Freedom Ring ceremony to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the historic March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech, at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C. August 28, 2013. (Official White House Photo by Pete Souza)

As President Obama traced the steps of giants today, let us also remember the extraordinary things accomplished by the countless ordinary people, who President Obama often calls America's "quiet heroes." They are our parents and grandparents; our coworkers, classmates, and neighbors. They are the men and women in this country who have rolled up their sleeves, and laced up their work boots every day over the past five decades to move this country forward. Some who marched "" others who simply took the early shift, year after year, so they would be home in time to cook dinner for their families before heading to a second job. Let us remember the many who have faced down violence, despair, and incredible odds, just to give their children a chance at a better life, and our country the chance to live up to its full potential. Today we salute the heroes who inspired us 50 years ago, and we honor the millions more whose blood, sweat, and divine strength have served to define our nation. We honor them with our reverence, and our willingness to sacrifice for the greater good, and march on. We honor them with our urgent action to deliver all Americans the rights and opportunities they deserve. "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere. We are caught in an inescapable network of mutuality, tied in a single garment of destiny. Whatever affects one directly, affects all indirectly."

-Martin Luther King Jr., 16 April 1963, Birmingham, AL The photo describes: President Barack Obama and First Lady Michelle Obama greet members of the King family at the conclusion of the Let Freedom Ring ceremony at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C., Aug. 28, 2013. The ceremony was held to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the historic March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech. (Official White House Photo by Amanda Lucidon)

Article online:

<https://www.uspa24.com/bericht-5078/obama-celebrating-a-half-century-since-the-march-in-washington-at-52-anniversary.html>

Editorial office and responsibility:

V.i.S.d.P. & Sect. 6 MDSStV (German Interstate Media Services Agreement): Rahma Sophia Rachdi

Exemption from liability:

The publisher shall assume no liability for the accuracy or completeness of the published report and is merely providing space for the submission of and access to third-party content. Liability for the content of a report lies solely with the author of such report. Rahma Sophia Rachdi

Editorial program service of General News Agency:

United Press Association, Inc.
3651 Lindell Road, Suite D168
Las Vegas, NV 89103, USA
(702) 943.0321 Local
(702) 943.0233 Facsimile
info@unitedpressassociation.org
info@gna24.com
www.gna24.com